The invaluable guidance and encouragement of Dr. Joseph A. Baird, Jr. is noted with deep appreciation. The other single person without whose help this paper would not have reached fruition and to whom I direct my thanks is my wife, Michele.

July 1, and October 1, 1879 by the San Francisco Architectural Publishing Company with Wolfe as Editor. It dealt with architectural matters and the building trade on the West Coast, with emphasis on San Francisco. Beginning with the April issue, a section titled "Building Intelligence" was included. In it were listed recent West Coast building contracts, giving location, date, type of building, owner, architect, builder or contractor, and cost. The paper lasted in this quarterly format but for long.

On January 1, 1880, The Quarterly Architectural Review was reorganized and renamed by The California Architectural Association, which retained Wolfe as Editor and was published by the same firm. The new publication was released monthly and retained everything the old format as its predecessor.

Beginning with Volume III, number 1, January 1882, the name was changed once more, this time becoming The California Architectural Building News, the appellation under which the paper would remain until its demise in mid-1883. Shortly after this name change, which appeared in the form of a not-very-convincing paper in the official organ of the San Francisco Chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

In June 1883 Wolfe included a notice of intent to sell the paper to any interested, responsible party. Though there were no takers,

INTRODUCTION

In January 1879 James E. Wolfe, San Francisco architect and the West Coast representative of Daniel Burnham of Chicago, began publication of an architectural newspaper. Titled The Quarterly Architectural Review, the paper was released January 1, April 1, July 1, and October 1, 1879 by the San Francisco Architectural Publishing Company with Wolfe as Editor. It dealt with architectural matters and the building trade on the West Coast, with emphasis on San Francisco. Beginning with the April issue, a section titled "Building Intelligence" was included. In it were listed current West Coast building contracts, citing location (city), type of building, owner, architect, builder or contractor, and cost. The paper lasted in this quarterly format but one year.

On January 1, 1880, The Quarterly Architectural Review was superseded and replaced by The California Architect & Building Review, which retained Wolfe as Editor and was published by the same firm. The new publication was released monthly and retained essentially the same format as its predecessor.

Beginning with Volume III, number 1, January 1882, the name was changed once more, this time becoming The California Architect & Building News, the appellation under which the paper would remain until its demise in mid-1900. Shortly after this name change, wording appeared in the form of a sub-title proclaiming the paper to be the official organ of the San Francisco Chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

In June 1886 Wolfe included a notice of intent to sell the paper to any interested, responsible party. Though there seems to have been immediate response, Wolfe evidently did not feel the parties involved to be serious enough, and the situation dragged on with the notice appearing in each issue. Finally, control of the paper was turned over to the San Francisco Architectural Publishing Company on January 1, 1889. This firm was newly formed by practicing San Francisco architects, and was not connected with the previous company of the same name. The initial Board of Directors were Albert Pissis, Henry T. Bestor, Oliver Everett, William P. Moore, Walter J. Mathews, R.H. White and W.J. Cuthbertson. The members of the Board immediately settled upon appointments of officers with the result that William P. Moore became President, W.J. Cuthbertson Vice-President, Seth Babson Treasurer, and Oliver Everett Secretary. At the time of this change, printing of the paper, previously handled by a firm in Oakland, was moved to San Francisco, and the offices of the San Francisco Architectural Publishing Company were established at the new Architectural Headquarters at 408 California Street, next to the Bank of California. The next change was not to occur until February 1898, when control of the paper was assumed by E.H. Burrell, with the offices remaining at 408 California Street.

Throughout its twenty and one-half year life (twenty-one and one-half if one includes The Quarterly Architectural Review) the paper was as eclectic as the architecture of the period. Articles were freely borrowed from other trade publications of the period, so that the paper tends to be somewhat less regional than might otherwise be expected. It dealt freely with all aspects of building and included some quite interesting formulae for such practical items as mucilage, artificial stone, wall plaster, stains, waxes, wood fillers, etc. There were a number of articles on house painting and decoration which are of interest to the historic preservationist, and, as the subject of a previous paper, are included herein as Appendix II. Some issues dealt heavily with the expanding lumber industry while others dealt with stone quarrying in California, citing the types of stone available from various areas. And to round things out, there were occasional mentions of art, architectural, and archaeological goings-on throughout the world which were, and are still, of interest. These latter articles dealt with such things as completion of the Washington Monument, construction of the Eiffel Tower, and the uncovering of the Sphinx.

The "Building Intelligence" section was retained throughout the life of the publication, though in 1898 it was carried only in the January issue. It is from this section that the following index is taken. The index is arranged in the following manner: The primary division is alphabetical, by the architects' surnames or firm name. Under each name, then, the listings are arranged chronologically, with the specific issues cited, eliminating the need for footnotes. In these citations, California Architect & Building Review is abbreviated CABR, California Architect & Building News becomes CABN, and The Quarterly Architectural Review (in Appendix I) is QAR. Thus, an issue citation reading CABR, V.I, n.8, August 1880, p.80 would refer to California Architect & Building Review, Volume I, number 8, August 1880, page 80. Below each citation are listed all buildings attributed to that architect in that particular issue. They are listed as to type of building (when indicated in the original listing), location, owner, and cost. With some listings, individual contracts

(as for carpenter work, brick work, iron work, plumbing, etc.) are given along with their respective costs. The contractors' names were omitted for all listings but, if desired, can be found by referring to the original listing in "Building Intelligence." Thus, a typical listing in this index might read: 2 story brick building, corner Washington & Laguna. John Doe. $18,000.

This index, while in no sense a complete record of building in San Francisco in this period, does give an in-depth look at the work of San Francisco area architects. Many of those listed were obviously amateurs, designing only their own house or that of a friend. Many others fall into the builder/contractor category, and may have been using borrowed plans or plan books for their designs. Several were obviously supervising architects. Listings vary from but a single structure for the minor figures, to more than twenty pages for Thomas J. Welsh. Costs vary from less than one thousand dollars to several hundred thousand dollars. However minor, if a person was listed as architect in connection with a building or job in "Building Intelligence," then he is recorded in this index.

Appendix I contains the listings compiled from The Quarterly Architectural Review for 1879. Though the original scope of this index was to be from 1880 to 1900, discovery of original copies of this paper in the State Library in Sacramento led to the decision to include 1879.

Appendix II is the text of a previous paper, researched primarily from the same source, dealing with house construction and decoration in the period 1880 to 1889, and contains its own footnotes and bibliography.

The reader is cautioned with regard to the names of streets and individuals listed herein. The original copy of the various papers contained quite a wide variance in this regard. There were even several spellings to be found for the names of major architects, so that the names of minor architects and of owners may be extremely suspect. Consulting the San Francisco City Directory for the proper year would be one means of double checking for correctness. In addition, there was a great deal of variance in the spelling of street names; Stuart/Steuart/Stewart being but one example. Some spellings were consistent but different from the present spelling, such as Devisadero vice Divisadero. And, some streets have been renamed or eliminated, forcing the user of the index to consult period maps or other research material in order to ascertain the present name and location.

With these cautions in mind, herein is presented the building index of San Francisco in the period April 1, 1879 to June 20, 1900, as listed in the California Architect & Building News and its predecessor publications. A second volume is planned which will deal with the other cities listed in "Building Intelligence" and which will include listings for California, Oregon, Washington, Texas and the Sandwich Islands (Hawaii).
